Abstract / 摘要:

Research Summary: Entrepreneurship accelerators are increasingly promoted as structural interventions to close gender gaps, yet studies have not established a differential impact of participation for women. This prior evidence—drawn from high-tech, male-dominated settings—may overlook how outcomes differ in more feminized domains such as social innovation. Using unique multi-level data from 1417 ventures applying to 33 accelerators, we examine whether average effects conceal variation across institutional environments and program designs. We find that in more gender-egalitarian countries, women-led ventures performed better than peers after participating, especially in programs aiming to support women. In less egalitarian environments, however, participation offered negative or no such advantages even in gender supportive programs. These results suggest that well-intended interventions to advance women entrepreneurs are context-dependent and may sometimes reinforce the very disparities they intended to diminish. Managerial Summary: Social innovation accelerators are often championed as a way to help women entrepreneurs thrive. But our analysis of 1417 ventures Received: 26 July 2023 Revised: 10 November 2025 Accepted: 23 December 2025 DOI: 10.1002/smj.70064 This is an open access article under the terms of the Creative Commons Attribution License, which permits use, distribution and reproduction in any medium, provided the original work is properly cited. © 2026 The Author(s). In more egalitarian countries, participation is associated with improved performance for women-led ventures, especially when programs are explicitly designed to support them. Surprisingly, the pattern flips in less egalitarian environments: women founders who join even women-focused programs often see no performance gains—or even declines—relative to peers. These findings suggest that well-intentioned support can backfire if it doesn't fit the local institutional environment. For program designers and leaders, this is a call to move beyond one-size-fits-all approaches and carefully align equity goals with the realities of the ecosystems they operate in. KEYWORDS accelerators, entrepreneurship, gender, social enterprise, social impact 1 |

研究摘要：创业加速器日益被作为弥合性别差距的结构性干预手段加以推广，但现有研究尚未确定女性参与加速器是否具有显著的差异化影响。这些源自高科技、男性主导环境的证据，可能忽略了在社会创新等更具女性化色彩的领域中，产出结果有何不同。利用来自申请 33 个加速器的 1417 家企业的独特多层数据，我们探讨了平均效应是否掩盖了不同制度环境和项目设计之间的差异。研究发现，在性别平等程度较高的国家，女性领导的企业在参与项目后表现优于同行，在旨在支持女性的项目中尤为明显。然而，在性别平等程度较低的环境中，即使在支持性别的项目中，参与也带来了负面影响或没有任何优势。这些结果表明，旨在促进女性创业的良好干预措施具有环境依赖性，有时甚至可能强化其初衷想要消除的差距。管理摘要：社会创新加速器常被视为帮助女性创业者成长的途径。但我们对 1417 家企业的分析表明，其效果取决于环境和项目设计。

Abstract / 摘要:

Research Summary: How does the mode of search—individually or jointly—affect collective search, a central component of organizational adaptation and innovation? Using naturally occurring data from a strongly incentivized online competition platform, we find that compared to their counterfactuals that search apart, groups searching together exhibit less exploration in their search outcomes as noted in prior experimental and computational modeling studies. However, groups searching together stimulate a greater number of search attempts from their members than groups searching apart, an effect that has so far remained unnoticed. Further, both search attempts and exploration contribute positively to search performance. This suggests that the choice of search mode should depend on the demands of strategic contexts that make either the variety or volume of solutions relatively more important for collective search. Using evidence from online machine learning competitions, we find that looking for solutions together encourages members to examine more alternatives but narrows the range of these ideas, while working independently generates greater variety but fewer alternatives being examined. We propose that the choice between the two depends on context. When innovation requires novel, distinctive solutions, as in early-stage R&D, independent work may be more effective. When speed and volume matter, as in patent races or crowded digital markets, searching for solutions together delivers faster iteration. Managers can improve innovation outcomes by aligning the mode of teamwork with the strategic demands of the problem. 研究摘要：搜索模式（独立还是联合）如何影响集体搜索——这一组织适应与创新的核心组成部分？利用来自一个具有强激励机制的在线竞赛平台（Kaggle）的自然发生数据，我们发现，与独立搜索的对等组相比，共同搜索的小组在搜索结果中表现出较少的探索性（Exploration），这与之前的实验和计算模拟研究一致。然而，共同搜索的小组比独立搜索的小组更能激发成员进行更多次数的搜索尝试，这一效应在此前尚未被注意到。此外，搜索尝试和探索都对搜索绩效有积极贡献。这表明，搜索模式的选择应取决于战略环境的需求，即解的多样性还是解的数量对集体搜索相对更重要。管理摘要：团队成员在寻找问题解决方案时的互动方式塑造了其产出。本研究通过 Kaggle 数据揭示了共同搜索在增加尝试次数与减少探索深度之间的权衡关系。

Abstract / 摘要:

Research Summary: Firms' and executives' stances on controversial issues affect consumer behavior. This "political consumerism" might be motivated by ideology and a desire to signal to peers, and thus vary for private and public purchases. We conduct an experiment with 1198 consumers to study how purchase visibility affects responses to CEO activism. Participants are randomly shown either generic product information or that plus a CEO statement supporting gun rights. They then choose between receiving the product or receiving cash, with half assigned to a condition where their choice is visible to someone they know. We find that CEO activism reduces demand among people who disagree with the CEO regardless of purchase visibility, indicating minimal signaling motives. Our results have implications for firms using politics to differentiate products. Managerial Summary: Business leaders who speak out on controversial social and political issues may attract or repel consumers who agree or disagree with their stance. Consumers may react more intensely when others can observe their purchases or boycotts, Young Hou and Christopher Poliquin contributed equally to this study and are listed in alphabetical order. We experimentally manipulate whether the decision to purchase a product from a firm whose CEO vocally supports gun rights is observable and whether consumers are aware of the CEO's stance. We find that consumers change their behavior in response to CEO political activism regardless of whether their choices are visible to others. This suggests that CEO activism can impel boycotts and that firms can differentiate themselves by taking political positions even when their products are less known or consumed privately. 研究摘要: 公司及其高管在争议性问题上的立场会影响消费者行为。这种“政治消费主义”可能受意识形态和向同行传递信号的欲望所驱动, 因此在私人购买和公共购买中可能有所不同。我们对 1198 名消费者进行了一项实验, 以研究购买可见性如何影响对 CEO 激进主义 (CEO Activism) 的反应。参与者被随机展示一般产品信息, 或者是产品信息加上一段支持持枪权的 CEO 声明。随后, 他们需要在接收产品或接收现金之间做出选择, 其中一半人被告知他们的选择对熟人可见。我们发现, 无论购买是否可见, CEO 激进主义都会降低那些不同意 CEO 立场的消费者的需求, 这表明信号传递动机极小。我们的研究结果对于利用政治手段实现产品差异化的公司具有启示意义。管理摘要: 在争议性社会和政治问题上表态的企业领导者可能会吸引或排斥与其立场一致或不一致的消费者。当他人能观察到消费者的购买或抵制行为时, 消费者的反应可能会更加强烈。

Abstract / 摘要:

Research Summary: Co-using tasks—using the same task to produce more than one product—promises economies of scope. However, task co-use also ties products together, changing a firm’s task network by introducing cross-product interdependencies. In light of these interdependencies, we identify an unrecognized downside of task co-use for product reliability: Cross-product interdependencies complicate task design and increase the risk of malfunctions. Hence, task co-use may carry a reliability penalty. Second, we propose that the reliability penalty of task co-use may shrink with experience as cross-product interdependencies allow for cross-improvements and therefore potentially higher improvement rates of task co-using products. We study the US automotive industry and find our predictions supported, indicating that task co-use is a critical design parameter with important consequences for reliability and product improvement. Managerial Summary: Using the same tasks to produce multiple products can help firms lower costs and achieve economies of scope. As a result, task co-use may reduce product reliability—an important but often overlooked drawback. At the same time, co-used tasks can enable portfolio-wide improvements—improvements across products. As firms gain experience, problems identified in one product can lead to improvements that benefit others using the same tasks. Over time, these cross-improvements accelerate product improvement for task co-using products and can reduce the initial reliability disadvantage. Evidence from the U.S. automotive industry supports these arguments. The findings show that task co-use is a key design decision that involves meaningful trade-offs between cost savings, reliability, and improvement. For managers, this highlights the importance of carefully evaluating when and how tasks should be co-used across products, as these choices have lasting implications for product quality and improvement. KEYWORDS automotive industry, failure, multiproduct firms, organization design, task co-use 1 |

研究摘要: 任务共用 (即使用同一任务生产多种产品) 有望带来范围经济。然而, 任务共用也将产品联系在一起, 通过引入跨产品相互依赖性改变了公司的任务网络。鉴于这些相互依赖性, 我们发现任务共用对产品可靠性存在一个此前未被认知的负面影响: 跨产品相互依赖性增加了任务设计的复杂性, 并提高了发生故障的风险。因此, 任务共用可能会带来“可靠性惩罚”。其次, 我们提出, 随着经验的积累, 任务共用的可靠性惩罚可能会缩小, 因为跨产品相互依赖性允许跨产品改进, 从而可能提高共用任务产品的改进率。我们对美国汽车行业进行了研究, 结果支持了我们的预测, 表明任务共用是一个关键的设计参数, 对可靠性和产品改进具有重要影响。管理摘要: 使用相同的任务生产多种产品有助于降低成本, 但这种做法也使产品线紧密相连。这种相互依赖关系在初期可能损害可靠性, 但长期看有利于通过经验积累实现整体改进。

Abstract / 摘要:

Research Summary: Prior research has examined whether individuals earn greater returns in entrepreneurship than in wage work but has paid little attention to gender differences in these returns. Using Swedish employee–employer data from 1990 to 2020, we compare individuals' earnings before and after they transitioned to entrepreneurship. We find that women founders earn less than men, yet this gap is smaller than in wage employment. Additionally, entrepreneurship yields disproportionately greater returns for (a) high-ability women facing glass ceilings in salaried positions, and (b) women in male-typed industries who encounter greater barriers to advancement in wage work. Together, these findings show that entrepreneurship can enable women to realize greater returns to their human capital, particularly when they face stronger constraints in paid employment. Managerial Summary: This study examines whether entrepreneurship widens or narrows the gender earnings gap compared to wage work. Using comprehensive Swedish data that track individuals before and after founding new businesses, we show that, although women founders earn less than men in absolute terms, they experience substantially larger earnings gains than men when moving from wage work to entrepreneurship. This advantage is most pronounced for high-ability women and for women in male-dominated industries, who face stronger barriers to advancement in salaried work. Our findings indicate that entrepreneurship offers women a pathway to realize greater returns to their skills and experience, yielding disproportionately higher earnings compared to remaining in salaried jobs. For organizations, these results highlight how structural constraints in wage employment can push talented women toward entrepreneurship. 研究摘要: 先前研究探讨了个人在创业中是否比在受薪工作中获得更高回报, 但很少关注这些回报在性别上的差异。利用 1990 年至 2020 年瑞典的雇员-雇主数据, 我们比较了个人在转向创业前后的收入情况。我们发现, 女性创始人的收入低于男性, 但这一差距比受薪就业中的性别收入差距要小。此外, 对于以下群体, 创业带来的回报不成比例地更高: (a) 在受薪岗位下面临“玻璃天花板”的高能力女性, 以及 (b) 在男性主导行业中面临更大晋升障碍的女性。总之, 这些发现表明, 创业可以使女性实现更高的人力资本回报, 特别是当她们在受雇就业中面临更强的约束时。管理摘要: 本研究探讨了与受薪工作相比, 创业是扩大还是缩小了性别收入差距。通过瑞典的综合数据追踪, 我们发现虽然女性创始人的绝对收入低于男性, 但从受薪工作转为创业时, 她们的收入增长幅度显著高于男性。这种优势在高能力女性和男性主导行业的女性中表现得最为明显。

Abstract / 摘要:

Social networks play a role in exacerbating or ameliorating inequality. The persistence of network-based inequality is well documented. However, the mechanisms that disrupt this unequal access to resources remain poorly understood. This study investigates how structurally disruptive events, such as mergers and acquisitions (M&As), reshape gender homophily and resource sharing in networks. We examine how 59 M&As shape the evolution of 82,064 physicians' referral and patient-sharing networks. We find that disruptive events enhance women's access to resources by altering gender-homophily dynamics in formation, and maintenance. Specifically, acquisitions intensify men's tendency to form ties with other men. In contrast, women are more likely to preserve ties with other women, with all-women dyads exhibiting greater resilience and higher maintenance rates than mixed-gender or all-men dyads. This dynamic results in richer networks for women, shielding them from the adverse effects of organizational disruption. These results highlight contrasting network behaviors following disruption: women winnow their networks, reinforcing stable, trust-based relationships with women, while men widen theirs, forming new distant ties with men. By demonstrating how gendered network dynamics evolve in response to disruptions, this study contributes to scholarship on gender inequality, network resilience, and conditions under which homophilous ties can mitigate disparities.

社会网络在加剧或缓解不平等方面发挥着作用。基于网络的不平等具有持久性,这一点已得到充分证实。然而,打破这种不平等资源获取机会的机制仍不为人所知。本研究调查了并购(M&As)等结构性破坏事件如何重塑网络中的性别同质性(gender homophily)和资源共享。我们考察了59起并购事件如何影响82,064名医生的转诊和患者共享网络的演变。研究发现,破坏性事件通过改变形成和维护过程中的性别同质性动态,增强了女性获取资源的能力。具体而言,收购强化了男性与其他男性建立联系的倾向。相比之下,女性更有可能保留与其他女性的联系,全女性二元组表现出比混合性别或全男性二元组更强的韧性和更高的维护率。这种动态导致女性拥有更丰富的网络,保护她们免受组织动荡的不利影响。这些结果突显了破坏后截然不同的网络行为:女性精简网络,强化与女性之间稳定的、基于信任的关系;而男性则扩大网络,与男性建立新的远距离联系。通过展示性别化的网络动态如何应对破坏而演变,本研究为性别不平等、网络韧性以及同质性联系如何缓解差距的条件等方面的学术研究做出了贡献。

Abstract / 摘要:

Implicit in the ideal worker norm is the assumption of the ideal worker body, a body that is always ready and willing to meet work demands. Yet, bodies vary in their ability to meet this ideal. Through a qualitative study of 66 workers in chronic pain, we build theory on the experience of a chronic, stigmatized deviation from the ideal worker body. Our analysis uncovered that as informants' pain interfered with their work, they attempted to pass as ideal-worker-bodied. However, attempting to pass ultimately increased their pain and its interference with their work, thus catapulting them into a vicious cycle. For two thirds of our informants, this cycle led to their pain becoming intolerable, forcing them to reckon with pervasive ableist norms as they turned to medical professionals for help. Informants who received validating cues from medical professionals were better able to relinquish, albeit with difficulty, the ideal worker body as necessary. They came to accept an alternative to the ideal worker body: a sufficient worker body. Informants who received invalidating cues continued in the vicious cycle of striving for the ideal worker body. Our findings contribute to scholarship on bodies at work, stigma at work, and the ideal worker norm.

理想员工规范（ideal worker norm）中隐含着理想员工身体（ideal worker body）的假设，即一个始终准备就绪并愿意满足工作需求的身体。然而，身体在满足这一理想的能力上各不相同。通过对 66 名患有慢性疼痛员工的质性研究，我们构建了关于慢性、污名化地偏离理想员工身体这一经历的理论。我们的分析发现，当受访者的疼痛干扰到工作时，他们会试图“伪装”（pass）成拥有理想员工身体。然而，试图伪装最终增加了他们的疼痛及其对工作的干扰，从而使他们陷入恶性循环。对于三分之二的受访者来说，这种循环导致他们的疼痛变得无法忍受，迫使他们在向医疗专业人员寻求帮助时，不得不直面普遍存在的能力歧视（ableist）规范。从医疗专业人员处获得肯定信号的受访者能够更好地放弃（尽管很困难）将理想员工身体视为必需的想法。他们开始接受理想员工身体的一种替代方案：一种“胜任的员工身体”（sufficient worker body）。而收到否定信号的受访者则继续在追求理想员工身体的恶性循环中挣扎。我们的研究结果为关于工作中的身体、工作中的污名以及理想员工规范的学术研究做出了贡献。

Abstract / 摘要:

Informal leadership has received considerable attention over the last decade, yet the literature remains unclear about the interpersonal dynamics in teams where both informal and formal leadership coexist. Integrating the social functional view of emotions with recent theoretical advancements on workplace jealousy, we propose a theoretical model that explains how supervisors react emotionally and behaviorally to informal leadership. Specifically, we theorize that, when an informal leader is highly competent, their informal leadership will elicit supervisor downward jealousy stemming from the supervisor's fear of losing valued relationships with the other subordinates; and this jealousy, in turn, will prompt more supervisor support and less abusive supervision toward the other subordinates who are also highly competent. We adopted a multiwave, multisource field study and an experiment using the critical incident technique to test our model and hypotheses. Results across these studies consistently supported our predictions. We discuss the theoretical and practical implications as well as future research directions of our work.

非正式领导力在过去十年中受到了相当大的关注，但关于非正式领导与正式领导并存的团队中的人际动态，文献仍不明晰。结合情绪的社会功能观与职场嫉妒的最新理论进展，我们提出了一个理论模型，解释主管如何对非正式领导力产生情绪和行为反应。具体而言，我们推论，当一名非正式领导者极具能力时，由于主管

担心失去与其他下属的宝贵关系，其非正式领导力会引发主管的向下嫉妒；而这种嫉妒反过来会促使主管对其他同样极具能力的下属给予更多支持，并减少虐待管理。我们采用了多波段、多来源的实地研究和一项基于关键事件技术的实验来检验我们的模型和假设。这些研究的结果一致支持了我们的预测。我们讨论了本研究的理论和实践意义，以及未来的研究方向。

Abstract / 摘要:

Creative projects require teams to both generate and integrate divergent ideas. While divergent ideas are necessary for creative success, they can also foster disagreements that can lead to collaborative breakdowns where individuals leave a project. Because creative work requires a strong reputation for moving from project to project, collaborative breakdowns threaten the ability to secure future work opportunities. We conduct a qualitative and a quantitative study to investigate the effectiveness of “creative differences” as a protective label for individuals that leave creative projects. Our inductive, qualitative analysis of interviews with Hollywood professionals reveals the potential for reputational damage following a collaborative breakdown, as well as the role of “creative differences” as a professionally ambiguous attribution meant to mitigate this damage. However, our informants offer conflicting views on its efficacy. From these insights, we abductively test hypotheses in a quantitative study examining directors who depart films due to creative differences, comparing them with those who leave for other reasons. Our study contributes by uncovering a novel dilemma in creative work—the role of collaborative breakdowns—and the potential hazards of relying on professionally ambiguous attributions as reputational shields for future career opportunities.

创意项目要求团队既能产生发散性想法，又能整合这些想法。虽然发散性想法对创意成功至关重要，但它们也会引发争论，进而导致合作破裂，致使成员退出项目。由于创意工作需要强大的声誉来在不同项目间流动，合作破裂威胁到了获得未来工作机会的能力。我们通过定性和定量研究，考察了“创作分歧”作为退出创意项目个体的保护性标签的有效性。我们对好莱坞专业人士进行的归纳性定性访谈分析揭示，合作破裂后可能出现声誉受损，以及“创作分歧”作为一种旨在减轻这种损害的职业模糊归因所起的作用。然而，我们的受访者对其有效性持矛盾观点。基于这些见解，我们在定量研究中通过溯因推理测试了假设，研究了因创作分歧而离开电影项目的导演，并将其与因其他原因离开的人员进行对比。本研究的贡献在于发现了创意工作中的一个新困境——合作破裂的作用，以及依靠职业模糊归因作为未来职业机会声誉盾牌的潜在风险。

Abstract / 摘要:

Investors perceive a CEO's regulatory foci based on the language they use. Complementing earlier studies on the direct effects of CEO regulatory focus, we propose a novel theoretical paradigm in which CEOs' regulatory-focused language act as interpretive frames shaping investors' reactions to earnings deviations—the positive or negative earnings deviations from analysts' expectations. We propose that investor reactions to earnings deviations will be amplified when investors perceive a CEO to have higher promotion focus, and dampened when investors perceive a CEO to have higher prevention focus. We employ a multimethod approach to test our theorizing; we use an archival study of S&P 500 firms from 2003 to 2017 to test our hypotheses, and two preregistered randomized vignette experiments to explore the underlying investor attributions theorized in our framework. Across all studies, we find broad support for our theorization regarding how CEO regulatory-focused language acts as interpretive frames for investors, which has important implications for research on the social view of financial markets and CEO regulatory focus.

投资者根据 CEO 使用的语言感知其调节聚焦。作为对早期关于 CEO 调节聚焦直接效应研究的补充, 我们提出了一个新的理论范式, 即 CEO 的调节聚焦语言充当了解释性框架, 塑造了投资者对盈利偏差 (即实际盈利与分析师预期的正向或负向偏离) 的反应。我们提出, 当投资者感知到 CEO 具有较高的促进聚焦时, 投资者对盈利偏差的反应会放大; 而当投资者感知到 CEO 具有较高的预防聚焦时, 这种反应会减弱。我们采用多方法途径来检验我们的理论; 利用 2003 年至 2017 年标普 500 指数企业的档案研究来检验假设, 并通过两项预注册的随机情境实验来探索框架中假设的潜在投资者归因。在所有研究中, 关于 CEO 调节聚焦语言如何作为投资者的解释性框架, 我们的理论得到了广泛支持, 这对于金融市场的社会观和 CEO 调节聚焦的研究具有重要意义。

Prior research suggests firms maximize the financial returns from corporate social responsibility (CSR) by focusing on how stakeholders reward their CSR investments. This demand-side view of CSR's financial returns overlooks the costs tied to each CSR investment, neglecting that returns also depend on the efficient use of resources. We integrate insights from corporate strategy research on firm diversification with the portfolio-based view of CSR to take a step toward a theory of optimal CSR diversification that balances demand-side and supply-side considerations. Our theory treats CSR investments as a diversification problem in which managers must choose from among three investment options when allocating additional resources to CSR: CSR portfolio scaling, within-cause diversification, and cross-cause diversification. Which option yields the highest marginal financial return at any point in a CSR portfolio's evolution depends on the diminishing marginal rewards from stakeholders and the increasing marginal diversification costs associated with each option. Crucially, demand-side (e.g., demand complementarities) and supply-side (e.g., resource fungibility) factors shape the rates at which marginal rewards and costs change over successive CSR investments. Our framework reveals new ways for firms to diversify CSR portfolios and enhance the financial returns from CSR investments by optimizing resource allocations across the initiatives comprising CSR portfolios.

此前的研究表明，企业通过关注利益相关者如何回报其企业社会责任（CSR）投资，来实现 CSR 财务回报的最大化。这种 CSR 财务回报的需求侧视角忽视了与每项 CSR 投资相关的成本，忽略了回报同样取决于资源的有效利用。我们将公司战略研究中关于企业多元化的见解与基于组合的 CSR 视角相结合，旨在建立一套平衡需求侧和供给侧考虑的最优 CSR 多元化理论。我们的理论将 CSR 投资视为一个多元化问题，管理者在为 CSR 分配额外资源时，必须从三种投资选项中做出选择：CSR 组合规模化、同类事业内部多元化和跨类事业多元化。在 CSR 组合演变的任何阶段，哪种选项能产生最高的边际财务回报，取决于利益相关者的边际回报递减以及每个选项相关的边际多元化成本递增。至关重要，需求侧因素（如需求互补性）和供给侧因素（如资源通用性）决定了边际回报和成本在连续 CSR 投资中的变化率。我们的框架为企业提供了多元化 CSR 组合的新途径，并通过优化 CSR 组合中各项计划的资源分配来提升 CSR 投资的财务回报。

Abstract / 摘要:

Organizations emphasize specific production practices to deal with authenticity pressures, but the practices that signal authenticity to audiences must be continually adapted when production environments are unstable. Changes in the environment can make production practices suddenly infeasible, compelling organizations to perform in different ways the highly visible practices that audiences have come to associate with authenticity. However, authenticity research tends to take the continuity of production practices for granted, focusing on whether certain practices are made visible or not, and leaving unexamined how practices are made legible as they are adapted. Drawing on 16 months of ethnographic fieldwork at a renowned winery (Cal-Cru), I identify a novel form of authenticity work—trajectory normalizing work—that Cal-Cru's production team performed internally, out of view from external audiences, to guide production changes. Specifically, the team created contrast cues to inform their actions. They avoided changes that would noticeably alter parts of production visible to audiences, or that clashed with their own understanding of authenticity. Doing so created a reassuring sense among the team that they were departing from audience expectations to sustain, not compromise, the practices that conveyed authenticity. My study highlights the backstage tensions constructing authenticity in unstable production environments.

见化，而未审视实践在调整过程中是如何变得易于解读的。基于在一家知名酒庄（Cal-Cru）进行的为期 16 个月的民族志田野调查，我发现了一种新型的真实性工作——轨迹正常化工作。Cal-Cru 的生产团队在内部（避开外部受众视线）开展此项目，以引导生产变革。具体而言，该团队创建了对比线索来指导其行动。他们避免那些会显著改变受众可见的生产环节或与自身对真实性的理解相冲突的变革。这样做在团队中营造了一种令人安心的感觉，即他们违背受众预期是为了维持而非损害传达真实性的实践。本研究揭示了在不稳定生产环境中构建真实性的幕后张力。

Abstract / 摘要:

The trend of moralizing work presents a paradox for contemporary workers. Employees equate their failures to live up to “good employee” ideals (e.g., always available, highly motivated, passionate) with moral failings. Yet, consistently meeting these ideals is unattainable for most employees. This manuscript introduces and develops the phenomenon of microconfessions—informal, low-magnitude confessions—as an overlooked tactic that employees use to alleviate the ongoing moral dilemma of falling short on moralized work ideals. Integrating self-disclosure and work moralization scholarship with insights from fields that have explicitly studied confession, I build a theory of employee microconfessions. I suggest that microconfessions provide the sharer with a sense of relief and a restored sense of morality, which in turn, have downstream consequences. I also pinpoint guilt—an emotion particularly relevant to the moralization of work—as key to activating and strengthening the effects of microconfessions. Finally, I illuminate how the information shared and the setting in which it is shared jointly influence the effects that I outline. My work establishes microconfessions as a unique form of workplace self-disclosure and pivots existing theories to consider functions of disclosure historically overlooked in organizational scholarship. It also contributes new understanding to how employees may experience and offset the moralization of work as well as when it is most advantageous for them to do so.

工作道德化的趋势为当代劳动者带来了悖论。员工倾向于将未能达到“优秀员工”理想标准（如随时待命、积极主动、富有激情）的行为视为道德缺陷。然而，对大多数人来说，持续达到这些标准是无法实现的。本文引入并发展了“微忏悔”（microconfessions）这一现象——即非正式的、低强度的坦白。作为一种常被忽视的策略，员工利用微忏悔来缓解因未能达到道德化工作理想而产生的持续性道德困境。通过整合自我披露与工作道德化的学术研究，并借鉴专门研究忏悔的其他领域见解，我构建了员工微忏悔理论。研究提出，微忏悔能为分享者带来解脱感并修复其道德感，进而产生后续影响。此外，本研究强调愧疚感——这种与工作道德化密切相关的情绪——是激活并强化微忏悔效应的关键。最后，本研究阐明了分享的信息内容与分享环境如何共同影响上述效应。本研究将微忏悔确立为职场自我披露的一种独特形式，并推动现有理论去关注组织研究中以往被忽视的披露功能。同时，本研究也为员工如何感知和抵消工作道德化，以及这种行为在何时最具优势提供了新的见解。

Abstract / 摘要:

Family firms are not a homogeneous group. Thus, we theorize and empirically validate how governance differences among family firms (family governance heterogeneity) influence internationalization, considering the home country's level of family collectivism as a moderator. Drawing on the bifurcation bias approach, we conduct a multilevel meta-analysis on 33,493 family firms. Our findings suggest that family CEOs and greater family involvement on the board hamper internationalization, but family collectivism improves these relationships. In contrast, non-founding generations promote internationalization independently of this country-level moderator. Our study reconciles the theoretical and empirical inconsistencies in the relationship between family governance and family firm internationalization.

Abstract / 摘要:

We apply attribution theory to examine how family ownership status shapes consumer attitudes toward companies after negative corporate social responsibility incidents, focusing on incident controllability. Two longitudinal experiments reveal that, when controllability is unknown, consumers infer lower controllability for family firms and thus hold more favorable attitudes toward them than non-family firms. However, when controllability is known, low-controllability incidents lead to similar attitudes across firm types, whereas high-controllability incidents reverse the effect, resulting in more negative attitudes toward family firms than non-family firms. These findings challenge the prevailing assumption that family firms consistently benefit from their reputation and inform stakeholder communication strategies.

我们运用归因理论探讨了在发生企业社会责任负面事件后，家族所有权地位如何塑造消费者的态度，并重点关注事件的可控性。两项纵向实验表明，当可控性未知时，消费者会推断家族企业的可控性较低，因此比非家族企业对它们持有更积极的态度。然而，当可控性已知时，低可控性事件在不同类型的企业中引起了相似的态度，而高可控性事件则逆转了这一效应，导致消费者对家族企业的态度比非家族企业更消极。这些发现挑战了家族企业始终受益于其声誉的普遍假设，并为利益相关者沟通策略提供了启示。

Research on crowdfunding has largely focused on fundraising success, overlooking post-success outcomes. Drawing on Self-Determination Theory, we hypothesize that user entrepreneurs show higher intrinsic but lower extrinsic motivation than non-users, with intrinsic motivation boosting delivery performance and extrinsic motivation hindering it. Using a mixed-method approach—an exploratory qualitative study and an analysis of 322 crowdfunded ventures—we find that user entrepreneurs deliver rewards more timely than non-user entrepreneurs, and that intrinsic motivation significantly mediates this relationship, while extrinsic motivation' s mediating role is insignificant. We contribute to the user entrepreneurship and crowdfunding literatures by highlighting drivers of post-campaign success.

Abstract / 摘要:

Transformational leadership is recognized for bringing family members together; however, its role in multi-unit complex family firms that rely on nonfamily managers is poorly theorized. We find that transformational family chief executive officers (CEOs) positively affect the performance of business units run by nonfamily managers, suggesting that transformational family CEOs significantly influence nonfamily managers' behavior. But the efficacy of that influence matters. Political skill enhances the transformational family CEO's impact on business unit entrepreneurial orientation and financial performance. Business unit entrepreneurial orientation also mediates the relationship between the transformational family CEO and business unit financial performance, particularly when CEO's political skill is high.

Abstract / 摘要:

Research Summary: Using a panel of 2688 city-year observations of German fintech ventures and entrepreneurial support organizations (ESOs), we examine how ESO presence relates to venture entry. We argue and demonstrate that this relationship is contingent on local founding conditions. We find that ESO presence is most strongly associated with entry in thin ecosystems, while this association weakens in more active and developed contexts. Patterns in entries of non-supported versus ESO-supported ventures, along with differences across ESO types, support our argument that primarily ecosystem-level bridging mechanisms, such as legitimacy diffusion, knowledge spillovers, and access to relational networks, are sensitive to local conditions, whereas direct support provided by ESOs to program participants is not context-dependent. Managerial Summary: Entrepreneurs, entrepreneurial support organizations (ESOs), and ecosystem builders benefit from understanding the broader economic and entrepreneurial context. In well-developed ecosystems, informal networks can provide access to knowledge, collaboration opportunities, and legitimacy signals, reducing the marginal contribution of additional ESO presence in the ecosystem. In less-developed ecosystems, ESOs can support venture entry by providing access to knowledge, collaboration opportunities, and legitimacy signals, reducing the marginal contribution of additional ESO presence in the ecosystem. 本研究利用 2688 个关于德国金融科技企业和创业支持组织 (ESOs) 的城市-年度观察样本, 考察了 ESO 的存在与企业进入之间的关系。我们认为并论证了这种关系取决于当地的创业条件。研究发现, 在“稀薄”生态系统中, ESO 的存在与企业进入的关联最为紧密, 而随着环境变得更加活跃和成熟, 这种关联性会减弱。非受助企业与受助企业进入模式的差异, 以及不同类型 ESO 之间的差异, 支持了我们的论点: 即主要是生态系统层面的桥接机制 (如合法性扩散、知识溢出和关系网络获取) 对局部条件敏感, 而 ESO 向项目参与者提供的直接支持则不受环境影响。管理启示: 创业者、创业支持组织和生态系统构建者可以从理解更广泛的经济和创业环境中获益。在发育良好的生态系统中, 非正式网络可以提供知识获取、合作机会和合法性信号, 从而降低了生态系统中额外增加 ESO 存在的边际贡献。在发育欠佳的生态系统中, ESO 则能更好地支持企业进入。

Abstract / 摘要:

Research Summary: Entrepreneurs use strategic framing to gain support for their novel ventures, products, and services. A key challenge entrepreneurs face is that audiences often contest frames that introduce novel ideas, especially when these ideas disrupt audiences' mental and business models. Such contestation can hinder novel ideas from being accepted, a risk that is amplified when entrepreneurs face contestation from multiple audiences. We lack understanding, however, of how contestation from multiple audiences shapes the strategic framing of novel ideas. We study this question at Tony's Chocolonely, a social enterprise that faced such contestation when introducing "slave-free" chocolate. By showing how the social enterprise reacted to contestation from multiple audiences in different ways, we uncover novel mechanisms of frame change and stability. Managerial Summary: Entrepreneurs use strategic framing to gain support for their novel ideas, products, and services. In so doing, they must navigate resistance from different audiences, especially when entrepreneurs introduce novel ideas that disrupt the status quo. Audience resistance can hinder novel ideas from gaining momentum. We do not know, however, how entrepreneurs can navigate resistance from multiple audiences. 创业者利用战略框架来为其新颖的企业、产品和服务争取支持。创业者面临的一个关键挑战是, 受众经常会质疑那些引入新颖构思的框架, 特别是当这些构思颠覆了受众的心理模型和商业模式时。这种质疑可能会阻碍新颖构思被接受, 而当创业者面临来自多个受众的质疑时, 这种风险会进一步放大。然而, 我们目前尚不

清楚多重受众的质疑如何塑造新颖构思的战略框架。我们通过研究 Tony's Chocolonely 这一社会企业来探讨这一问题，该企业在推出“无奴隶制”巧克力时面临了此类质疑。通过展示该社会企业如何以不同方式应对来自多重受众的质疑，我们揭示了框架变迁与稳定性的新机制。管理启示：创业者利用战略框架获取对其新颖想法、产品和服务的支持。在此过程中，他们必须应对来自不同受众的阻力，尤其是当创业者引入颠覆现状的新颖构思时。受众的阻力可能会阻碍新颖构思获得动力。然而，我们并不了解创业者如何应对来自多重受众的阻力。本研究考察了致力于消除巧克力行业童工现象的社会企业 Tony's Chocolonely 如何通过调整其战略框架来应对这些挑战。

Abstract / 摘要:

Abstract Organizations today operate in a new information environment, where changing technologies have enabled fundamentally different forms and pathways of information creation and dissemination while also generating unintended consequences—chief among them increased polarization. In combination, the new information environment and polarization have profoundly altered the social processes underpinning social evaluations. To animate social evaluations research on these issues, we consider how information environment shifts and increased polarization affect the value and durability of five social evaluation types—legitimacy, reputation, status, celebrity/infamy, and stigma/esteem. We highlight the implications for both theorizing about and empirically studying social evaluations in an ever more polarized world.

Abstract / 摘要:

Abstract

Humanity –the virtue enabling meaningful human connection –is vital to the leadership we need to survive our polycrisis context. As a prerequisite to sustainable human community, the virtue of humanity is considered universal. It has been claimed as a ‘higher-order virtue’, comprised of and enacted by –but irreducible to –a suite of ‘lower-order virtues’ such as compassion and kindness. This claim is evident in widely-adopted virtues catalogues, but we lack consensus on how humanity is defined, and which attributes qualify as its virtuous dimensions. To address this, we develop a robust definition of humanity and apply criteria distilled from virtue ethics to theorize the lower-order virtues that comprise its virtuous dimensions. We thus determine the virtuous dimensions of humanity include empathy, compassion, forgiveness, love, kindness, and generosity. Our processual model illustrates how, when expressed by leaders and followers, these virtuous dimensions represent the fullest expression of the higher-order virtue of humanity and sustain human community. Our systematic review details what is known empirically about each virtuous dimension of humanity in relation to leadership. Drawing on this, we propose a research agenda to advance understanding of how the virtue of humanity might enable the leadership needed today and into the future.

仁爱 (Humanity) ——一种促成有意义的人际连接的美德——对于我们在多重危机背景下生存所需的领导力至关重要。作为可持续人类社区的先决条件，仁爱美德被认为是普世的。它被称作一种“高阶美德”，由一系列“低阶美德”（如同情和善良）组成并体现，但不能简单等同于这些低阶美德。这一主张在广泛采用的美德目录中显而易见，但我们在仁爱的定义以及哪些属性属于其美德维度方面缺乏共识。为了解决这一问题，我们为仁爱制定了一个稳健的定义，并应用从美德伦理学中提炼的标准，对构成其美德维度的低阶美德进行理论化。据此，我们确定仁爱的美德维度包括同理心、同情心、宽恕、爱、善良和慷慨。我们的过程模型展示了当领导者和追随者表现出这些美德维度时，它们如何代表仁爱这一高阶美德的最充分体现，并维持人类社区。我们的系统综述详细介绍了关于仁爱各美德维度与领导力之间关系的现有实证研究。在此基础上，我们提出了一个研究议程，以增进对仁爱美德如何赋能当今及未来所需领导力的理解。

Abstract / 摘要:

Abstract Prior entrepreneurial network literature has primarily examined how entrepreneurs' networking efforts facilitate interorganizational exchanges, while giving little attention to the agency of their contacts. In this study, we investigate how contacts' intra-organizational status shapes their actions of referring entrepreneurs to their organizations for acquisition. Drawing on middle-status conformity theory and interviews, we argue that, compared to high- or low-status actors, middle-status actors are more concerned about status loss and face a higher likelihood of such loss; therefore, they have a lower tendency to connect entrepreneurs with their organizations, resulting in a U-shaped effect of contact status on referring actions including quantity, quality, and efficiency. Furthermore, this U-shaped effect is moderated by organizational ownership and norms. The results based on 12,103 venture-acquirer dyads support most of our hypotheses. Our study contributes to the entrepreneurial network literature by identifying the agency of contacts and their specific referring actions. It also adds to the network agency literature by highlighting the organizational context in which the contacts are situated as a critical enabler or inhibitor of such agency. In addition, it enriches the mergers and acquisitions literature by revealing the roles of actors at various organizational levels in facilitating corporate engagement with new ventures.

以往的创业网络文献主要研究了创业者的社交努力如何促进组织间的交换, 而很少关注其联系人的能动性。在本研究中, 我们探讨了联系人的组织内部地位如何塑造其将创业者推荐给所属组织进行收购的行为。借鉴中等地位从众理论并结合访谈, 我们认为, 与高地位或低地位的行动者相比, 中等地位的行动者更担心地位流失, 且面临这种流失的可能性更高; 因此, 他们将创业者与其组织联系起来的倾向较低, 从而导致联系人地位对推荐行为 (包括数量、质量和效率) 产生 U 型影响。此外, 这种 U 型效应受到组织所有权和规范的调节。基于 12,103 个创业企业-收购者对子的研究结果支持了我们的大部分假设。本研究通过识别联系人的能动性及其具体的推荐行为, 为创业网络文献做出了贡献。它还通过强调联系人所处的组织情境是这种能动性的关键促成因素或抑制因素, 丰富了网络能动性文献。此外, 通过揭示不同组织层级的行动者在促进公司与新创企业接触中的作用, 本研究也丰富了并购文献。

Abstract / 摘要:

Abstract

While prior studies typically treat firm reputation as a stable, intangible resource reflecting cumulative competence, we extend a socio-constructionist perspective by shifting the focus to reputation instability—erratic fluctuations in a firm's reputation over time relative to its industry peers. We argue that reputation instability functions as a distinct and often overlooked market signal by introducing ambiguities that influence investor valuation of a firm in a stock market context. Crucially, the impact of reputation instability is further shaped by contextual cues that anchor investor expectations. A firm's current reputation and industry dynamism condition how instability may be regarded, either as a warning sign or a potential indication of improvement. Using panel data across four major US industry groups over 21 years, we find evidence consistent with our theoretical framework and identify critical boundary conditions under which reputation instability is penalized or rewarded by the market. By reframing reputation as a dynamic and unstable construct, our study advances theory on reputation signals, offering novel insights into how reputational temporal dynamics – not just established levels – shape firms’ market outcomes.

虽然先前的研究通常将企业声誉视为反映累积能力的稳定无形资源，但我们通过将重点转向声誉不稳定性——即企业声誉随时间相对于行业同行的异常波动，扩展了社会建构主义视角。我们认为，声誉不稳定性作为一种独特且常被忽视的市场信号，通过引入影响股票市场背景下投资者对企业估值的歧义性发挥作用。至关重要，声誉不稳定性产生的影响还受到锚定投资者预期的情境线索的影响。企业的当前声誉和行业动态调节了不稳定性被视为警示信号还是潜在改进迹象的方式。通过使用美国四个主要行业组 21 年间的面板数据，我们发现了与理论框架一致的证据，并确定了市场惩罚或奖励声誉不稳定的关键边界条件。通过将声誉重新定义为一个动态且不稳定的构念，本研究推进了声誉信号理论，为声誉的时间动态（而非仅仅是既定水平）如何塑造企业的市场结果提供了新颖的见解。

Abstract / 摘要:

Abstract Previous research suggests that the effect of CEO activism depends on its alignment with stakeholders’ political ideology. We examine when and why CEO activism can enhance corporate reputation across the ideological spectrum. Integrating signalling theory with a cognitive perspective on reputation formation, we argue that the reputational impact of CEO activism depends on the firm's corporate social responsibility (CSR), which fosters perceptions of organizational authenticity. Using a national survey and an experiment, we find that CEO activism improves corporate reputation through perceived moral authenticity. This effect is stronger when firms hold B Corp certification, engage in philanthropic donations, or are perceived as more socially responsible. Although stakeholders rate firms as more reputable when their political ideology aligns with the CEO's activism, this relationship weakens when firms engage in CSR, thereby signalling authenticity. These findings demonstrate how non-market strategies interact to shape corporate reputation and inform corporate sociopolitical advocacy among heterogeneous audiences.

Abstract / 摘要:

Abstract Recent studies acknowledge that the contribution of female directors at the board may not be uniform but instead varies depending on their individual characteristics and board context. In this study we focus on a pivotal yet insufficiently explored facet of female directors –their affiliation with the business owning family –and assess its implications for family firm financial performance. Drawing upon the ‘doing gender’ perspective, we contend that family-affiliation creates a formidable barrier for female family directors, impeding their legitimacy within the board and ultimately reducing their contribution to firm financial performance. Our empirical analysis spanning 127 Italian listed family firms from 2003 to 2019 reveals that family female directors exhibit a less positive influence on firm financial performance than their non-family counterparts. We further show that this effect is contingent on the presence of male family members on the board –being positive when their presence is low but turning negative when their presence is high. In essence, our study represents an important advancement in understanding the intricate and contingent effects of female directors within a distinct context of family firms.

最近的研究承认，女性董事在董事会的贡献可能并非千篇一律，而是取决于其个人特征和董事会情境。在本研究中，我们关注女性董事一个关键但尚未得到充分探索的方面——她们与企业所属家族的隶属关系，并评估其对家族企业财务绩效的影响。借鉴“做性别”（doing gender）视角，我们认为家族隶属关系为女性家族董事制造了巨大的障碍，阻碍了她们在董事会内的合法性，并最终减少了她们对企业财务绩效的贡献。我们对 2003 年至 2019 年间 127 家意大利上市家族企业的实证分析显示，与非家族女性董事相比，家族女性董

事对企业财务绩效的正面影响较小。我们进一步表明，这种效应取决于董事会中男性家族成员的存在——当男性家族成员较少时，该效应为正；而当男性家族成员较多时，该效应则转为负。从本质上讲，本研究在理解女性董事在家族企业这一独特情境下复杂且权变的效应方面取得了重要进展。

Abstract / 摘要:

Political embeddedness and family embeddedness are two influential yet distinct areas of entrepreneurship research. In this study, we integrate these two streams of research to focus on family political embeddedness and its implications for new venture creation. Drawing on the social embeddedness perspective and utilizing a longitudinal dataset of 17,084 individuals from the China Family Panel Studies (2014–2022), complemented by 32 qualitative interviews, we examine the relationship between family political embeddedness and entrepreneurial entry, revealing a nuanced interplay. Our theory and related findings reveal a general negative relationship between family political embeddedness and entrepreneurial entry. However, we also unveil an indirect pathway through which family political embeddedness can foster entrepreneurial entry through political news consumption. Finally, we theorize and find that perceived government efficiency strengthens the relationship between political news consumption and entrepreneurial entry. Our work yields important theoretical and practical implications. Acknowledgments: This study was supported by National Natural Science Foundation of China (Grant No.

Abstract / 摘要:

Parties in an alliance aim to capture both common and private benefits. As they transfer and jointly create knowledge to generate common gains, differences in private benefits can arise due to asymmetric knowledge spillovers. Our model of alliance structural choices incorporates the alliance itself—the channel through which partner knowledge flows—to reflect the fact that partners and the alliance may operate in different industry contexts. We propose that partners select structural governance mechanisms (equity governance and alliance scope) to enable valuable knowledge flows while protecting themselves from unwanted spillovers. Analyzing a large sample of U.S. alliances from 1985 to 2024, we find that asymmetric distance predicts these governance choices and that it is linked to the simultaneous use of multiple structural safeguards, including equity governance and a narrow alliance scope.

Abstract / 摘要:

In the United States, more than a quarter of the working-age population experiences physical disabilities that shape workplace participation and career outcomes. Drawing on 168 articles, we synthesize the management literature to develop a unifying framework of focal mechanisms, workplace outcomes, and boundary conditions. In doing so, we offer a clear definition of physical disability, long absent from management research. We also highlight the fragmented theoretical and methodological landscape, in which most studies aggregate disability types, overlooking critical heterogeneity. Our review charts a path forward by identifying key gaps, outlining directions for future scholarship, and emphasizing the need for stronger theoretical grounding and methodological rigor. Finally, we discuss implications for policy and practice, underscoring how greater inclusion of persons with physical disabilities can advance various workplace outcomes.

Abstract / 摘要:

Social media have fundamentally reshaped how organizations and audiences interact, challenging theoretical assumptions in the management literature. With this integrative literature review, we take stock of a fragmented body of research, based on an analysis of 647 articles across 9 disciplines. Our synthesis identifies three dominant perspectives: an organization-centric perspective that views social media as tools for strategic action; an audience-centric perspective that emphasizes audience empowerment and contestation; and a platform-centric perspective that highlights how platform features and algorithms condition organizational outcomes and audience interactions. Building on these perspectives, we develop an integrative framework of organizational enablement, audience empowerment, and platform mediation that captures how social media extend and redirect established theories. We distill five major research areas—identity and community, social evaluations, corporate social responsibility, false narratives, and organizational outcome drivers—that capture the core themes of management scholarship to Acknowledgments: We are grateful to Jeremiah McGhee for assistance with coding the corpus and for valuable feedback on earlier drafts from Dr. Eleanor Colleoni, Dr. Michael D. 社交媒体从根本上重塑了组织与受众互动的方式，挑战了管理学文献中的理论假设。通过这篇综合性文献综述，我们基于对 9 个学科 647 篇文章的分析，对这一碎片化的研究领域进行了总结。我们的综合研究确定了三个主导视角：以组织为中心的视角，将社交媒体视为战略行动的工具；以受众为中心的视角，强调受众的赋权与抗争；以及以平台为中心的视角，强调平台特征和算法如何调节组织成果和受众互动。基于这些视角，我们开发了一个关于组织赋能、受众赋权和平台中介的整合框架，捕捉社交媒体如何延伸和重定向既有理论。我们提炼了五个主要研究领域——认同与社区、社会评价、企业社会责任、虚假叙事和组织成果驱动因素——这些领域涵盖了管理学研究的核心主题。致谢：我们感谢 Jeremiah McGhee 在语料编码方面的协助，感谢 Eleanor Colleoni 博士、Michael D. Abstract / 摘要:

Selecting which aspects of empirical phenomena to investigate is a fundamental yet underexplored challenge in qualitative research. This paper introduces an interactional sociolinguistic methodology to examine how a qualitative research team navigated this challenge during a three-year project. By analysing real-life team discussions, we identify four types of interactionally co-constructed commitments –straightforward, uncertain, repeated and withheld commitments –that enable teams to balance exploratory openness with the need to narrow their focus within the interplay between the observed empirical field and academic discourse. Building on these insights, we propose an interactional sociolinguistic model of collective commitments to ‘what is interesting’ in qualitative research. Our study contributes to methodological scholarship by revealing how linguistic interaction shapes shared direction and methodological decision-making in team-based qualitative inquiries.

选择经验现象的哪些方面进行调查是定性研究中一个基本但尚未得到充分探索的挑战。本文介绍了一种互动社会语言学方法, 用于考察一个定性研究团队在一个为期三年的项目中如何应对这一挑战。通过分析真实的团队讨论, 我们识别了四种类型的互动式共同构建的承诺——直接的、不确定的、重复的和保留的承诺。这些承诺使团队能够在观察到的经验领域与学术话语的相互作用中, 平衡探索性的开放性与缩小关注范围的需求。基于这些见解, 我们提出了一个关于定性研究中对“有趣之处”达成集体承诺的互动社会语言学模型。本研究通过揭示语言互动如何塑造团队定性调研中的共同方向和方法论决策, 为方法论学术研究做出了贡献。

Abstract / 摘要:

Drawing on neo-institutional theories, this study explores how universities engage in internationalization as organizational actors embedded in national and global contexts. Using a mixed-method approach and based on a sample of 500 universities across 89 countries, we analyse how a country’s global competitiveness and liberal tendencies shape the ways its universities organize structures and activities around internationalization, particularly amid today’s intensified global competition among countries and universities and the resurgence of illiberalism. Our quantitative analyses show that national competitiveness is positively associated with internationalization activities, whereas national liberalism is positively associated with internationalization structures. Additionally, our qualitative analyses reveal variations in how universities motivate and emphasize different aspects of internationalization across the continuum of national competitiveness and liberalism. Together, our findings extend neo-institutionalist research by highlighting distinct aspects of organizational actorhood and the heterogeneity demonstrated across contexts.

本研究借鉴新制度主义理论，探讨了大学作为嵌入在国家和全球背景下的组织行为者如何参与国际化进程。通过采用混合方法研究，并基于涵盖 89 个国家 500 所大学的样本，我们分析了一个国家的全球竞争力和自由主义倾向如何塑造其大学围绕国际化构建组织结构和活动的方式，特别是在当今国家与大学间全球竞争加剧以及非自由主义回潮的背景下。定量分析显示，国家竞争力与国际化活动正相关，而国家自由主义水平与国际化结构正相关。此外，定性分析揭示了在国家竞争力和自由主义的连续谱系中，大学在激励和强调国际化不同侧面上的差异。总之，我们的研究发现通过强调组织行为主体性的不同维度以及跨背景展示的异质性，扩展了新制度主义研究。

Abstract / 摘要:

Addiction is not just an individual or public health issue. It is also embedded in organizational practices. We argue that addiction is engineered through the design of addictive goods and the structuring of habitual patterns of behaviour incentivized by organizations. We conceptualize how organizing sustains addictive behaviours by creating and reinventing what we term new objects and subjects of addiction. By conceptualizing addiction as an organizational phenomenon, we foreground its embeddedness in institutional, technological and economic arrangements. We then set out an agenda for further research on its organizational dimensions and the mechanisms that sustain and mitigate it.

成瘾不仅仅是一个个人或公共卫生问题，它也嵌入在组织实践中。我们认为，成瘾是通过成瘾性商品的涉及以及由组织激励的习惯性行为模式的构建而精心策划的。我们构思了组织化如何通过创造和重塑我们称之为新的“成瘾客体”和“成瘾主体”来维持成瘾行为。通过将成瘾概念化为一种组织现象，我们突出了其在制度、技术和经济安排中的嵌入性。随后，我们提出了一个关于成瘾的组织维度及其维持与缓解机制的进一步研究议程。

Abstract / 摘要:

Digital platforms have become prominent marketplaces in various domains, including accommodation (e.g. Airbnb), trading (e.g. eBay), transportation (e.g. Uber), shopping (e.g. Amazon) and recruitment of skilled labour (e.g. Upwork). The World Bank has estimated that workers in the gig economy now represent 12.5% of the global labour force, which corresponds to 435 million gig workers, with growth rates ranging from 14% in Global North countries to 130% in Global South countries. This labour market is characterized by short-term contracts, freelance work and the use of digital platforms as a form of organizing that connects workers with clients. Given the increasing weight of gig workers in the global labour force, understanding how the gig economy changes the ways in which organizations control workers is needed. Hatim Rahman addresses this in Inside the Invisible Cage: How Algorithms Control Workers by drawing on a six-year ethnographic study (from 2014 to 2020) of one of the largest global online labour market platforms for highly skilled workers (Chapter 1). Inside the Invisible Cage shows that the platform studied controlled highly skilled workers by using algorithms that shifted the criteria for success without providing notice, explanations or recourse for the workers who used it (p. 3). When collecting data, Rahman engaged with the platform as both a client and a worker, which enabled him to produce an outstandingly rich account.

Abstract / 摘要:

Unrest (original Swiss title: Unruhe) by Cyril Schäublin is a film about workers, activists, and entrepreneurs in a Swiss watchmaking town at the end of the 19th century. Though fictional and depicting a period of profound technological transformation, Unrest eschews a dramatized plot and thus often feels like a documentary, anachronistically shot in high-definition video at a time when photography was in its infancy. This observational style, paired with the film's thematic focus, makes Unrest a fertile ground for organizational theorists. The film examines how the commodification and spread of technologies reshape temporal landscapes (Tavory & Eliasoph, 2013)—the cultural narratives about time that influence actors' experiences and agency. Viewed through this lens, Unrest raises important questions about the interaction of technology, temporality, and organizing. After providing a summary of the film, this review highlights two key insights that Unrest offers to organizational theory. These relate to (1) the naturalization of clock time and (2) the collapsing of temporal and spatial experience. I conclude by discussing the opportunities these insights provide for future research. Set in 1877 in the town of St. Imier, Unrest follows Josephine, Pyotr, and Roulet. Josephine works assembling the "unrest wheel," a delicate watch mechanism, in Roulet's watchmaking factory. Roulet, a capitalist, oversees operations run by men in scientific garb who measure workers' efficiency with pocket watches in a precursor to Taylorism. These managers enforce high quotas, reporting unproductive workers to the police.

西里尔·肖布林 (Cyril Schäublin) 执导的《摆轮》(Unrest, 瑞士原名 Unruhe) 是一部讲述 19 世纪末瑞士钟表小镇上的工人、活动家和企业家的电影。尽管这是一部虚构作品且描绘的是一个深刻技术变革的时期，但《摆轮》避开了戏剧化的情节，因此往往感觉像是一部纪录片，在摄影术尚处于起步阶段的时代，却反时分地

Abstract / 摘要:

After the popular book The Secret Barrister, I was thrilled when a new book titled The Secret Lecturer crossed my social media timeline. Most of us working in business schools, particularly in the UK context, are only too aware of how flawed, or even broken, our current systems are. In 2021, Peter Fleming showed in his book Dark Academia that this is largely due to commercialisation and bureaucratisation, which he claims are key characteristics of the so-called “neoliberal university.” “Lifting the lid on academia”, according to The Times (2024),¹ The Secret Lecturer gives an anonymous account of the experiences of a (male) UK-based university lecturer, amplifying our understanding of what it is like to work within neoliberal universities. It is written in the form of diary entries spanning roughly an academic year.

继畅销书《秘密大律师》(The Secret Barrister) 之后, 当我看到一本名为《秘密讲师》的新书出现在我的社交媒体时间线上时, 我感到非常兴奋。我们大多数在商学院工作的人, 尤其是在英国背景下, 都非常清楚我们当前的系统是多么有缺陷, 甚至是支离破碎。2021 年, 彼得·弗莱明 (Peter Fleming) 在其著作《黑暗学术界》(Dark Academia) 中指出, 这在很大程度上归因于商业化和官僚化, 他声称这些是所谓 “新自由主义大学” 的关键特征。据《泰晤士报》(2024 年) 所述, 《秘密讲师》“揭开了学术界的盖子”, 匿名描述了一位 (男性) 英国大学讲师的经历, 深化了我们对在新自由主义大学工作真实状况的理解。该书以日记的形式编写, 时间跨度约为一个学年。

Abstract / 摘要:

At present, AI technologies are frantically promoted, sold, and implemented with claims that they can massively replace human labor by automating all types of tasks, allowing for slimmer organizational processes. With “intelligent” technologies, parts of management can be automated, parts of teaching, parts of customer service, parts of planning, and so on, supposedly making humans redundant. Such promises echo the predictions accompanying every significant innovation in automation technologies since the Industrial Revolution. Such predictions about “the future of work” have been critically examined in organization studies both with reference to them being disproven time and again (e.g., Fleming, 2019) and for failing to acknowledge the work involved in keeping automation technologies running (Justesen & Plesner, 2024).
